

How much truth is too much truth on a first date?

Or

Taking that first step to finding a soul partner

You have been single for a while, your children are living their own lives, and you are feeling the need to have a companion or a friend in your life to share and do things with. But alarm bells are going off, as you've heard the online dating horror stories, are feeling a little self-doubt and are completely lost on how to meet a GENUINE person.

We speak to Fiona Dorse from Corporate Dating, a premier dating service that has successfully brought like-minded people together for the past 11? years, on taking that first step, the do's and don'ts, and how much one should, or not, share (or, expect) on a first date.

Fiona, first tell us what makes your dating system so successful?

What are your client requirements?

What are some complete No's for a first time meeting/date?

Please share some tips for the many single parents out there wanting to meet their soul partner.

(How much can a client expect to pay for a dating service?)